Notifications in SameGoal can help users save time, stay organized, and streamline communication. Email notifications are especially helpful because they provide valuable insight without even needing to log in to SameGoal. However, email notifications become less beneficial if too many are sent because it can clutter someone's inbox and cause them to become overwhelmed.

While most users receive very few notifications on any given day, a small portion of users may receive tens or even hundreds of notifications in a single day. In order to avoid sending too many emails and causing notification fatigue for these users, we are introducing email digests!

When email digests are enabled, users will only receive up to 10 email notifications a day. Once a user receives 10 email notifications in one day, email notifications will be paused until the next day at 6:00 AM. The last email will indicate that automatic digest mode has been enabled and a summary of any additional email notifications will be sent the next morning. However, notifications will continue to be sent via in-app bell and web push if they are enabled.

Additionally, if multiple emails are sent in quick succession, they will be collapsed into a single email that provides a summary of all relevant notifications. This will help to ensure users still receive actionable notifications while limiting the total volume of daily emails.

Tip Email digests do not apply to account or security emails. For example, password reset emails and MFA code emails will not count toward the daily email limit and will continue to be sent after a user has reached their daily threshold.
